

The NAB already has too much control over what we hear on the radio. Consumers make an economic choice to abandon terrestrial radio each time we purchase a satellite radio receiver and activate the service. This is truly an example of the free market economy at its' best. The NAB only seeks protectionist policies for it members - stifling competition in the process and further homogenizing the airwaves. Let the market decide what is best for radio by not limiting the consumer or the satellite providers choices.
